

Written by Edward Chang
Translated by Randolph Kuo

I established a shrine in my house in May 28th 1992. We have a saying that after you establish a shrine in your house, your past life creditors will not come and collect what you owed them in your past life. So before I opened my shrine, something strange happened to me. Three days before I opened the shrine, my legs were in severe pain and I couldn't walk. Every time I walked upstairs, I had to crawl. I wanted to drive to the doctor's office to get it checked out. In the middle of my drive to the office my car engine stopped running and I was stuck in the middle of the road. Because I was working, it was inconvenient for me to be a vegetarian. I begged Lao Mu if I could become vegetarian after retirement. My wife said to me, if you open a house shrine you must be vegetarian. I reluctantly said when I open the shrine that day, is the day I will become a vegetarian. After I said that, the car started up again. Next day around 8am, when we opened our shrine and lit the Mu light all of a sudden an earthquake hit Los Angeles. The Mu Light fell to the floor. At that time Senior Master Yang said something very calm, "Don't worry, pick up the Mu Light and start over again." After that, the rest of the day went by smoothly and I opened up my new shrine. From that day until now, I've had a very peaceful and smooth life through all aspects including my family and business matters. My company suddenly got closed in 1993. I lost my job but found a new job in Malaysia soon. I became a manager. My company provided me a car, all of my meals, a house, as well as housekeeper. For about eight years, I didn't even have to pay for my living expenses, except golfing. Most of my salary I sent back to US for my children's tuitions. After eight years, one of my clients in Tennessee asked me to be their company's consultant. They also let me worked at home for five years. During those five years, I helped this company open the Southeast Asian market. Later that year in China, Guangdong, I established a factory for the company and retired when I was 67 years old. I am very thankful to Lao Mu.